District Kommandaturas

- 4. The following district kommandaturas were subordinated to the Central Kommandatura: Molotovski, Leninski, Kirovski, Rostokinski, Leningradski, Oktyabrski, Dzerzhinski, Zhelesnodorozhnyi, Sokolnicheski, Baumanski, Timiryazevski, Kuibyishevski, Khimkinski and some others. The functions of the district kommandaturas were limited to carrying out the responsibilities of the Second Department of the Central Kommandatura, namely, the patrolling service. For this purpose the district kommandaturas had the following personnel:
 - (a) Commandant
 - (b) Deputy Commandant
 - (c) Three Assistants, the officers of the day (Dezhurnyi)
 - (d) Adjutant
 - (e) One or two military investigators
 - (f) One driver

SECRET/SECURITY INFORMATION

- 5. Until June 1943 district patrols were provided by the second NKVD division. After this date NKVD troops were only used at city limits check points or at important intersections within the city. Supervision of this service remained the responsibility of the Central Kommandatura. As of June 1943, the military until stationed in the Moscow region detached regular patrolling units which were put under the jurisdiction of the respective district kommandaturas for 24 hours according to a rotation schedule authorized by the Central Kommandatura. The composition of these sections was as follows:
 - (a) A detachment commander, usually a sergeant
 - (b) An assistant
 - (c) Four or five patrolling soldiers
 - (d) Three guards to watch the persons arrested

Before assuming duty, patrol personnel were given a thorough briefing on their duties and a detailed itinerary. The senior member had a red band on his sleeve with the letters KP (Komendantski Patrul) in white and a certificate stating that he and his co-workers were members of the command patrol.

- 6. Duty officers of the district kommandaturas had the authority to decide on the disposal of the arrested personnel. Punishments were administered either by the Kommandatura Commander or by the regular unit commanders. They were always entered on the leave or duty orders. For minor violations, such as failure to salute or entering a bazaar, two hours drill was a common punishment. Drivers violating traffic regulations were either degraded or deprived of their licenses.
- 7. Almost daily kommandatura patrols, accompanied by an efficer, made raids on railroad stations. On such occasions all suspected deserters were arrested. A single district might arrest as many as 50 to 70 deserters in a single month. In many casea, however, such deserters could prove that they had been left behind on a march or during a rail transport and only the most inexperienced deserters were actually punished. As thorough investigations would take too much time, most of these deserters were simply sent back to the front, via the military transfer point, located on Stromynka Street, Sokol'niki. It may be added that periodic round-ups were also carried out by the agencies of the MGB and always proved very successful.
- 8. All military personnel on leave or duty orders report to the military kommandatura or the Voyenkomat immediately after their arrival and before their departure. Corresponding entries were made on the leave or duty orders and serve as proof that the individual has actually gone to his destination.
- 9. After the war the activity of the military kommandaturas was greatly curtailed. The district kommandaturas were abolished and the Central Kommandatura was reorganized to carry out all the duties performed by them.
